

YOU STRIKE A WOMAN, YOU STRIKE A ROCK!:
AFRICAN AND AFRICAN DIASPORA
FEMINISMS/FEMINISTS, PAST AND PRESENT

Nana Brantuo, M. Ed.

February 12, 2019

7-9pm

Fralin Auditorium

---

Nana Brantuo is a doctoral candidate in the Minority and Urban Education program at the University of Maryland, College Park. Her academic interests focus on the mobility, migration, and educational experiences and trajectories of African and African descendant peoples. Her work has taken her to various centers and institutions, including Howard University, the University of Ghana, Legon, the University of the West Indies, Cavehill, The Schomburg Center for Research in Black Culture, and the University of Havana - giving presentations, facilitating dialogues and workshops, and collaborating with activists, educators, policymakers, and researchers alike. She is also an adjunct professor and lectures on education and development in Sub-Saharan Africa at the George Washington University in the International Education Program.

Alongside her academic pursuits, Nana works as a policy consultant for several non-profit organizations in the Washington Metropolitan Area. She has also published a number of articles for publications such as The Hill, PBS Newshour, Black Perspectives (African American Intellectual History Society), and OkayAfrica.